

Integrated Physiology and the Physiome Project

Most people have heard of the genome project and perhaps the proteome project but few have heard about the recently established Physiome project. This is an undertaking on a grand scale with the goal of creating a complete digital representation of a human being, from DNA through to whole body function. Much of what we do falls under this general umbrella and we are working with a number of international collaborators towards this long term goal.

